

Kids these days . . .

Don't know what they do in schools these days . . .

Be honest. Give yourself a mark out of ten. This is a practice test to explain the basic idea of what employers (the people who will give you a job) think about young people leaving school (or uni!)

I say great things about my favourite railway and wouldn't slag it off on social media
I know a lot about my favourite railway and could answer all sorts of questions about it
I get ready for school without any nagging and am always on time
I do odd jobs for people and they trust me to do them well
I get on well with other people in groups. I don't argue with them or insult them, but I say what I think and people listen when I do.
If my plans don't work out, I can change them quickly and don't make a fuss
I dress smartly when I need to and am proud of my appearance
I always speak clearly on the telephone and people never say they can't understand me
If I saw something happen on the way to school, I could write an accurate description for the police in handwriting anybody could read and make hardly any mistakes
I can use a computer easily for anything I need to do
I can add up my score from this test in my head in ten seconds and convert the answer to a %, all without a calculator (Hint. How many questions were there?)
My percentage score for this test

Did you get at least 80%?

Oh yeah? Well, that was just a practice you marked yourself. Inspector Perkins has put a real test on HOPS. You'll learn about that soon!
